"I believe that practicality and innovation go hand-in-hand. A client is best served by a cohesive team that can see the bigger picture in each case."

Taylor N. Sellers is a client-focused attorney with a diverse practice history. She brings a modern, Midwestern approach to advocacy for her clients. She believes that punctuality is the basis for good relationships and the best work product. Taylor specializes in case analysis and hones in on the most important facts and evidence in each case to work efficiently toward a resolution for each client.

Taylor began her legal career as an intern working in federal civil and criminal prosecutions. After law school, she worked at a boutique law firm specializing in white collar criminal defense and complex civil litigation. She has successfully defended clients in trial and supported summary judgment motions. Her broad range of practice exposed her to unique cases and innovative legal arguments.

In 2024, Taylor joined MWH's employment law division. Learning from her unique practice history, Taylor understands complex employment scenarios and enjoys a challenge. She also understands that each case is an opportunity to help a client learn about the best practices in employment law in the workplace.

Drawing from her experience with motions, mediation, and trial in complex cases, Taylor understands that finding a successful path to case resolution takes skill and collaboration. Taylor is a team player who loves taking initiative and is always looking for opportunities to learn and grow.
